Introduction

At every meeting you attend, in every newspaper and newsmagazine, the 'buzz word' is globalization. More than ever before, we are all conscious of the fact that the world around us continues to grow larger and larger every day.

The women's movement has always been global, because of principle, conviction, and out of necessity, because real structural change can only be achieved through international solidarity. Cooperating on a global scale was difficult in past decades: written communication was time consuming, telephone contact was either impossible or too expensive, and conferences were often too far away to attend. Women and women's groups always found a way to meet and inspire each other though, but it cost a lot of time, effort and money. Globalization and new communication technologies give women the opportunity - without needing to mee: face to face - to exchange information, to develop campaign strategies, to conduct e-mail campaigns, and to declare solidarity with each other. The speed with which, for example, emails travel around the world often results in unexpected positive changes.

At the same time, the world is becoming smaller for many women. As a result of the effects of European unification, increasing intolerance and stricter laws, the situation for female refugees in the Netherlands, for example, is not improving. They are detained for years in refugee centers, waiting for the results of their asylum applications. Their freedom of movement and the private space they have for themselves are being radically reduced. Low-income women do not profit from our rapidly expanding world. They must, even in this era of unprecedented wealth, struggle and scrape to get by. Also, most of the women in the Global South are not enjoying the benefits of globalization. To the contrary, they are being crushed under the iron heel of market forces. Women must work as domestic servants for days on end without any free time for themselves, without the possibility to socialize with others, without any legal protection and being entirely at the mercy of their employers.

The women who do not conform to the established norms of how they must live their lives find that their freedom to do and live as they wish is compromised. In many countries, lesbians cannot express their sexual identity because society rejects them and there is no place where they have the freedom to be themselves.

Mama Cash wants to give women the space they need to make their ideals and dreams come true. That: women want this too is proven time and time again by the ever-increasing stream of requests we receive from women all over the world, asking for help and support. To make their ideals come true, money, but also moral support, solidarity, and contacts with other women's organizations, is needed.

Mama Cash is gaining more space for herself too: in recent years our voice has been heard at various forums and conferences. Increasingly, policy makers realize that women have a crucial role to play in building a well-functioning society. Moreover, Mama Cash has grown in 2000. There are now 52 women actively involved in our work, as board members, volunteers and staff. Happily, our financial means are also increasing. For us, the financial support we receive from our donors and other financiers also counts as moral support. It's good to know that so many other people share Mama Cash's ideals and appreciate her working methods.

With this annual report, we present you with an overview of the women and women's organizations that Mama Cash has supported in 2000. Throughout the world, with a diverse array of themes and strategies, women are working to achieve the freedoms that they deserve. Mama Cash's support in this is vital.

Lilianne Ploumen
Director Mama Cash
The organisation

Mama Cash is comprised of the Global South Fund, the Central and Eastern Europe Fund, the Culture Fund, the Guarantee Fund, and Women with Inherited Wealth. The Mama Cash Foundation manages the finances, controls the annual budget, and employs all personnel. The four working funds each have their own fund manager and advisory board specialized in the various fields. Per April 1, 2001, as a result of statutory changes to Mama Cash’s organization, the various funds now have an advisory board, rather than a board of directors. Working together in close cooperation, the advisory board and the respective fund manager establish the criteria by which requests are judged. These criteria, moreover, are regularly adjusted to fit recent developments in the different regions. Requests can be submitted throughout the year. At our head office we make an initial selection from the incoming requests, and if necessary, we request more detailed information. Then, the fund manager offers advice concerning the chosen requests. Finally, a special meeting is held, when the advisory board decides which requests will be supported.

Mama Cash puts great care into the composition of her advisory board. Advisory board members are of diverse backgrounds, expertise and experience. The Global South Fund and the Central and Eastern Europe Fund especially rely on our global network of local advisors. This network consists of professional women who have detailed knowledge of the situation in a particular country and who subscribe to Mama Cash’s criteria. Through our local advisors, the fund manager gains the required information about the groups or organizations that submit requests to one of our funds.

The Dutch Ministry of Finance classifies Mama Cash as a ‘Foundation with a general social function’. Consequently, donations made to Mama Cash are tax-deductible. Mama Cash has also received the ‘Hallmark for Fundraising Organizations’, which means that Mama Cash raises funds, spends money and provides information in a responsible manner.

Fundraising

For eighteen years our donors have been the foundation of our organization. The year 2000 was a very special year for Mama Cash in that sense. In the beginning of the year we were astounded by a donor’s 5 million guilders donation. This sum has been earmarked as an endowment for our organization, with which Mama Cash can ensure her future. The total number of donors also increased. Donors can make ‘tailor-made’ donations to Mama Cash. And in addition to the one-time donation, donors can make a ‘going steady’ donation, which means that they periodically donate a certain amount of money to Mama Cash. Many of donors opt for a notarised donation because this donation enjoys the advantage of being tax deductible. Additionally, there are also various individuals who make long-term loans (five-year minimum) to Mama Cash. Furthermore, an increasing number of people make Mama Cash a beneficiary of their last will and testament.

In addition to private donors, various institutional funders support Mama Cash. In 2000, NOVIB, Hivos, Stichting DOEN and the Liberty Fund supported Mama Cash. For the second year in a row we received funds from the Directorate General for International Co-operation (DGIS) of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In the United States, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation continued to support our work.

In 2000, two donor advised funds were accommodated by our foundation: Born Fund and Tijl Fund. These funds met the criteria Mama Cash sets for selecting and supporting projects. The placing of a donor advised fund with Mama Cash gives private donors or an organization the opportunity, via our infrastructure, to contribute to projects and causes that need extra support.

Global South Fund

Mama Cash supports small, independent women’s groups in the Global South (the Third World) who are striving to improve the position of women. To this end, Mama Cash provides ‘start-up money’ for the setting-up of new groups or projects. Moreover, Mama Cash supports groups who, because of their radical stance, have difficulty obtaining funds from other sources. The Global South Fund focuses on women’s groups in Africa, Asia, Latin America, Caribbean, the Pacific and the Middle East who are not affiliated with governments, political parties or religious organizations. Grants of up to f 10,000 are awarded.

Via the Global South Fund, Mama Cash invests in the setting-up of a worldwide network of women’s funds that also operate from a feminist perspective. This network meets once a year to exchange knowledge and experiences, and to formulate strategies of how they can combine their strengths. There are presently women’s funds in Brazil, India, South Africa, Ghana, Nepal, Mexico, Mongolia and Ukraine.

Central and Eastern Europe Fund

Mama Cash supports women’s groups in the post-Communist countries of Central and Eastern Europe who are engaged in consciousness-raising activities regarding the social position of women and are working to improve their lives. This region stretches from the Baltic States (Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania) to Kazakhstan. The Central and Eastern Europe Fund supports women’s groups in this region who address important issues, such as defending a woman’s right to control her own body and sexuality and protecting women from (sexual) violence. We provide financial support to groups who are not affiliated with governments, political parties or religious organizations. Grants of up to f 10,000 are awarded.

Culture Fund

The Culture Fund strives to accentuate the diversity and power of women in the Netherlands. By supporting women’s projects, the Culture Fund helps to structurally improve the social position and image of women, to develop a critical range of ideas regarding gender and ethnicity, and to draw attention to the artistic expressions, ideas and experiences of women. Grants of between f 500 and f 5,000 are awarded.

Art Awards

Mama Cash wants to contribute to a more proportional representation of men and women in the art world, for policy makers as well as professional artists. For this reason, Mama Cash annually presents two art awards. In 2000, we celebrated the tenth anniversary of the Mama Cash Awards. The winners of the art awards, as well as a selection of runners-up, are given the opportunity to exhibit their work during the special Mama Cash Art Awards exhibition.

Guarantee Fund

The Guarantee Fund promotes the economic independence of women by making it easier for female entrepreneurs to obtain bank loans. Women who do not have their own capital are usually unable to get bank loans. Starting entrepreneurs, as well as recent starters and established entrepreneurs are eligible for loan guarantees of up to f 50,000. The guarantee, however, is never for more than fifty percent of the bank loan, because the Guarantee Fund believes that banks must also share a measure of financial risk.
In addition to loan guarantees, the Guarantec Fund also offers small loans to women who, for demonstrable reasons, have been rejected by the bank. These small loans are for a maximum of 6,000 and have a maximum duration of three years. There is no brokerage commission. But a favorable rate of interest is charged. Further, the Guarantee Fund subsidizes initiatives that aim to improve the entrepreneurial culture and climate for female entrepreneurs.

Women with Inherited Wealth

Money that one inherits is not the same as money that one earns. Often, there are conditions attached to inherited wealth, and one is not always able to spend it freely. Moreover, it's often difficult for women to safely navigate their way through the mostly male-dominated, conservative financial world. For these reasons, Mama Cash founded the ‘Women with Inherited Wealth’ working group, a network of female inheritors that has been active for ten years. The goal of 'Women with Inherited Wealth' is to increase the financial self-confidence of women so that they can take full responsibility for their inherited wealth and to encourage them to use their inheritance in a socially responsible manner.

Donor advised Funds

Maro Fund
In 1999 for the first time a private funder accommodated a donor advised fund at Mama Cash. She gave it the name: Maro Fund. This fund focuses on a few specific working areas: art, political participation of women, historic research and travel expenses to be able to participate in international conferences of the specific working areas. The Marofund exists for a minimum of five years and gives out f 60,000 in grants every year.

Born Fund
In 2000 the second donor advised fund was accommodated at Mama Cash, called the Born Fund. The Born Fund was established in 1933 by Liebeth Ribuis Peletier, a well known and respectable member of the Socialist and Democratic Labour Party. She donated an accommodation to the foundation in which education and training were given to women, so as to enable them to participate in social and political life. These days the accommodation is rented to others, and with the revenues of this, the Born Fund was established. The Born Fund donates a substantial annual amount to Mama Cash to finance initiatives that improve the democratic influence and authority/say? of women over their lives.

Tijl Fund
Also in 2000 the Tijl Fund was accommodated by Mama Cash. The Tijl Fund supports female visual artists of 40 years and up, in the costs for producing their work: funding can be provided for materials, publicity or exhibitions.

Co-operation with Josine de Bruyn Kops Foundation
In 2000 a co-operation was set up between Mama Cash and the Josine de Bruyn Kops Foundation. Through this co-operation female visual artists younger than 40 years can be supported in the costs of their work, publication and the improvement of professionalism of visual arts in general.

New Initiative: Economic Empowerment

In 2000 Mama Cash started a new programme: Economic Empowerment. More and more women's groups approached Mama Cash support of economic projects. Often these projects are income-generating projects, which would create (temporary) incomes for a small number of women. Many women are marginalized economically and must take the initiative and start projects themselves to improve their financial situation. They look for an extra job, they migrate to areas where the wages are better, they start a trade on the side, and they cut costs wherever possible. Many women are trying to improve their situation collectively, in a group. Naturally, Mama Cash wants to support good, well thought out programs and initiatives that especially target the structures that marginalize women, impoverish them and keep them economically at the bottom of the pile. And then from a feminist perspective.

On September 1, 2000, Mama Cash appointed a new staff member to continue developing and designing the Economic Empowerment program. This program would compliment Mama Cash's existing activities and funds. Mama Cash's other funds already touch on economic empowerment from their respective angles. For example, the Global South Fund has always supported groups that advocate and fight for women's land rights.

For Mama Cash, economic empowerment means helping to build and strengthen the power of women. We want to help improve their economic position and, with it, to improve the world economic structures. Economic empowerment is more than just being financially independent. Empowerment is also about well-being, access, consciousness, participation and control, also economically. For Mama Cash, economic empowerment means changing both the individual and women collectively. We want women to have a say about their own money, to feel economically important and appreciated, and we want to change today's world economy, which increasingly marginalizes women.

With our new Economic Empowerment program, which will be launched in mid 2001, we will support women's groups that serve as an example to others; women's groups that are working to change structures; and women's groups that are not only working towards improving their own position, but also working towards improving the position of larger groups and categories of women.
Patricia Vera, Global South Fund manager: 'In 2000, the Global South Fund underwent many changes, especially regarding personnel. After ten years with Mama Cash, Will Janssen resigned as the Global South Fund manager. Around the same time, Carla Brüntt also resigned, having accomplished an enormous amount of work in her eight years as a volunteer with our organisation – especially, in the last few years, for the Global South Fund. And Kirsten Langeveld, who, as a volunteer helped with requests from Africa, also left our organization.

Our new team, which is comprised of two regional specialists, an administrative assistant, and myself, worked hard to process the growing stream of requests. Our two regional specialists are authorities on Latin America and Africa. Both women are natives of these regions and bring with them knowledge and expertise of the local women's movement. I myself handle the requests from Asia, assisted by our administrative assistant. I was not unfamiliar with the work of Mama Cash: for several years I had been a member of the Global South Fund's board of directors.

Together with the Global South Fund's executive board, our new team has reoriented our policy. This has, for example, led to our formulating specific criteria and identifying specific target groups for each particular region. This allows us to better serve the needs and situation of the local women's movement. With this reformulation, our advisers were of great assistance to us. They live in the region, endorse Mama Cash's mission, and know what the situation is in the local women's movement. Of course, a number of issues, such as sexual and reproductive rights and economic empowerment, remain important for all regions.'

'The number of requests we receive continues to grow. Worldwide, women are organizing more initiatives and developing more activities. These initiatives are incredibly diverse, and that's reflected in the projects that we support. In our eighteen years, Mama Cash's name has become increasingly well known and consequently women now know where to find us. Free-market economics have a powerful impact on the lives of women, and this is reflected in the large number of requests we receive from Latin America and Asia, where women work in sectors that offer little protection for workers and union organizing, such as prostitution, domestic service, and the agricultural industry. Women are shamefully exploited by this prevailing economic system. Yet, at the same time, they understand the importance of organizing. Such initiatives we eagerly support.'

'In Africa, we mainly support projects that involve training and consciousness-raising. For example, we've financed courses that teach women specific skills and knowledge, such as Internet courses, but we also support courses that deal with the political process, helping to teach women the importance of voting and voting for the best candidates. Many projects in Africa are focused on sexuality and health issues, such as HIV-AIDS. This ranges from projects that teach prostitutes to use condoms and practice safe sex, to setting up information centers about the risks of sexually transmitted diseases.'

Everybody co-operates to abolish female circumcision

Mali women from the Association Malienne pour le Suivi et l'Orientation des Pratiques Traditionnelles

"We, the young mothers of Kandia, cannot have our own opinions. We follow the road that our old women have paved," explains Korotoumou, in a documentary about female circumcision in the Mali. Korotoumou holds the traditional view about female circumcision: "I follow the other villagers. Nobody can isolate themselves in the village. I have no choice, especially concerning the circumcision of girls." But she realizes that the situation could be changed: "It can help if we discreetly talk about it. As we say in Mali: 'Heavy things must be moved carefully.'"

Kadidia Sidibé Aoudou Malga is the founder and director of the Association Malienne pour le Suivi et l'Orientation des Pratiques Traditionnelles (AMSOPT). AMSOPT is working to abolish female circumcision in seventy villages in rural Mali. Together with field-workers, Mme Sidibé informs the villagers about the harmful effects of these traditional practices. With all due respect for the villagers' traditions, she ultimately convinced the villagers to hold a ritual ceremony for themselves and the inhabitants of surrounding villages in which female circumcision is abolished.

In the documentary, Mme Sidibé explains her working methods: "First, we provide information and education, then we provide time for reflection, and ultimately a decision is made. Abolition is good, but I want people to spend a lot of time reflecting on it before reaching a decision. The realization of why people want to abolish it is important. And also that people continue to take the responsibility to properly ensure it remains abolished. Because the villages are surrounded by other villages that continue to circumcise their own young girls. And our girls will later marry into these villages. The status of the village after abolishing female circumcision is more important than the act of abolition itself."

In the documentary, an AMSOPT field-worker, Asta Diallo, shows the village women a plastic doll. It's features a woman's spread legs. Between her legs are the various parts of circumcised and uncircumcised vaginas. "Think about an earring. If you pierce your ear, you can end up with fungus growths. That happens during circumcision too. The flesh can grow, and that can cause problems during sexual intercourse, and also during childbirth." Sidibé expressly chooses to use this shocking method: "It's a choice, you can't shock people and allow them continue circumcising their daughters, so that they'll eventually die. But you can also shock people a lot so that they see what actually happens."

Circumcised women often suffer from serious, often fatal, hemorrhaging. But villagers do not make a connection between the circumcision and the hemorrhaging. Mme Sidibé: "They think it's caused by the evil eye. The bleeding is the work of a witch, a sterile woman who couldn't conceive children herself. Because neither the person performing the circumcision nor the village is held responsible, the consequences of circumcision are not seen as dangerous."

In the village of Tourela, the people have abolished the circumcision of girls. The ceremony is a spectacle of song, dance, theatre, music, and histories of various important villagers. A banner proclaiming 'Musow ka bolokolile yaw. Koson fasoden kelen kelen ka wulikid aka dabila.' ('Female circumcision causes many problems. Everyone must help to abolish it.') welcomes visitors from the surrounding villages.

Mme Sidibé is once again thinking about the future: "Now the work really begins. Field-workers in the villages will have a larger role. They must go from family to family to hear how they've reacted to the abolition of female circumcision. It's also a good idea for villagers to set up a committee themselves. They can follow-up on the compliance and make sure nothing is hidden."
The Angela Borba Fund is the youngest sister in the international network of Independent Women's Funds, which includes Mama Cash. The Fund is named after a feminist from Rio de Janeiro who opposed the military dictatorship in Brazil and fought for democracy. She died in 1998, at the age of forty-six. Amalia Fischer is one of the Fund's founders and says via email: 'Many Brazilian feminists loved Angela Borba because she was so very progressive. She didn't hold her tongue or mince her words. We therefore decided to honor a woman of our own generation with this Fund, someone who was important to us.'

According to Amalia, it is often difficult for women to get financing for their projects. 'Until recently, many women's groups received money from development cooperation. At the moment, however, many foreign organizations have withdrawn their support from Brazil and other Latin American countries because the gross domestic product is too high according to the criteria set by the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. This means that these countries no longer qualify. Because of this, women's groups are experiencing financial problems. That's why the Angela Borba Fund is necessary,' Amalia explains.

In August 2000, the Fund organized the seminar 'Women, Social Responsibility and Financial Resources' in Rio de Janeiro. Mama Cash had already in 1999 provided funding for the organization of this seminar. 'We used this seminar to introduce the Angela Borba Fund. We wanted to bring the importance of investing in women's projects to the attention of the business community and the general public. Representatives of women funds from Ghana and Mexico attended the seminar. They presented their experiences with fundraising for women's projects. It was important that there were many Brazilian organizations in attendance, according to Amalia, because giving money to initiatives that create social change is not a part of Brazilian culture.

'The Angela Borba Fund strives to improve the human rights of women,' writes Amalia. 'We want to amass the economic means necessary to strengthen women's groups and to encourage projects that women can benefit from and that stimulate a wider social participation of women. It's necessary to give women the economic means they need to put their ideas into practice. In this, we help them contribute to important social change and their own future.'

The Fund finances women's groups and individual women who are fighting for women's rights, especially regarding non-traditional professions and education, art and culture, communication, sexuality, anti-racism, violence and health, and research in the field of gender and women's studies.

The Angela Borba Fund knows Mama Cash very well. Amalia: 'Mama Cash is the big sister you wish for when you grow up. We've learned a lot from Mama Cash, especially about how to build up a women's fund. We have a horizontal and respectful relationship.'

Presently, Amalia and eight of the Fund's volunteers are working hard to achieve their objectives. 'The Fund is developing slowly, but steadily. We have hope and trust in our work. We have much to do. This year we want to organize two breakfast meetings with businessmen and women, combined with a workshop about gender issues. The goal is to encourage them that by giving money they can take social responsibility with regards to women.'

Hanneke Hazeveld, Central and Eastern European Fund manager: ‘In 2000, our funds’ policies were continued: to support, stimulate and maintain small women’s groups who are working toward renewal. We received requests from all the Newly Independent States, as the post-Communist countries in this region are called: from the Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, to Kazakhstan. Our advisors are our eyes and ears. In 2000, we added a number of advisors for countries such as Azerbaijan, Kyrgyzstan, Armenia and Georgia. We do our best to find good advisors for the various countries in the region. It’s sometimes difficult to reach people in this region. Telephone and email connections can be inoperable for weeks or an advisor may have been forced to flee because of violence. That means that some requests are processed with a delay.’

‘The position of women in the post-communist countries is getting worse, rather than better. The reasons for this are continuing economic problems, the disappearance or malfunctioning of public services, and the societal norm that says women must work and take responsibility for the family. The influence of religion, which is rapidly spreading, severely restricts women’s freedom of choice. Moreover, wars in a number of countries, such as the Caucasus, Chechnya, and Kosovo, have created a stream of refugees. Additionally, pollution is a great concern of women’s groups in many regions. Polluted land, water, and nuclear waste are threatening public health and, particularly, the reproductive health of women. All these developments are shown in the requests we receive.’

‘Because the number of requests we received involving violence against women increased so drastically in 1999, I attended the conference, ‘Women and Violence,’ in Dublin. The aim was to go there and gain more knowledge about the consequences of violence against women in the various countries. Moreover, it was a way to meet the various organizations involved with this problem. There were a number of representatives from Central and Eastern Europe. They confirmed that violence against women in this region is increasing. A number of studies in the Baltic States and Russia revealed that many women do not always recognize violence for what it is, feeling instead that it is just normal behavior. Requests made to Mama Cash regarding violence and sexual violence are therefore often aimed at consciousness-raising and campaigning.’

Violence against women is an important theme in the requests made to the fund, but according to Hanneke, there are also other issues of critical importance. ‘The requests we received in 2000 were extremely diverse: From a trans-national cafe where women from different conflicting ethnic groups in Bosnia could meet one another and a short-film festival on an Internet site in Russia, to the recording of a CD by a lesbian singer and an information campaign about women and drug trafficking. Women in Central and Eastern Europe are organizing and campaigning on all fronts!’

Currently, drug use is certainly one of the most severe social problems in the world. In her grant request for the project ‘Women in drug trade’, Manzura Koshonova draws attention to the grave consequences of this fact, especially for women. Manzura works Perspektiva, a scientific research center in Dushanbe, the capital of Tajikistan. Perspektiva was founded in 1996 to support women during the change to a free market economy following the Tajikistan civil war. Manzura: ‘Perspektiva means ‘future’. Our organization is trying to improve the futures of Tajikistan women. We especially focus on single women, widows, refugee women, unemployed women, and mothers of large families. We inform them of the damaging effects of drug use and drug trade.’

Every day Tajikistan deals with the consequences of drugs, which are transported from its neighbor, Afghanistan, to Western countries. ‘Ever since the civil war, the drug trade in Tajikistan has been flourishing. People in rich countries are willing to pay a lot of money for drugs.’ To escape poverty and survive, the drug trade became an economic necessity in a poor country like Tajikistan. Drug use has serious consequences for the social and criminal relationships in society, says Manzura. ‘It covers the whole spectrum, from the problem of homelessness and babies born addicted to drugs, to government corruption and organized crime.’

A lot of women in Tajikistan are involved in drugs, either as users or dealers – usually both. Perspektiva’s research shows that women use twice as many drugs as men. Between 1993 and 1998, drug use among men doubled, but drug use among women quadrupled. Also, more women than men are dealing drugs. ‘Although the Koran forbids it, and Muslim women risk everything when they enter the drug trade, it’s often purely a result of need. Poverty forces them to choose for criminality and they are unprotected and vulnerable to violence,’ says Manzura.

With Mama Cash’s help, ‘Perspektiva began an extensive research project in which the organization concentrated on this problem. ‘Firstly, we’ll find out the exact role women play in the drug trade. Next, we’ll give two workshops. In the first workshop, we’ll give women information about the damage drugs cause in society and provide them with alternatives, with which they can earn safer and more stable incomes. In the second workshop, we’ll focus on the reasons why so many women are involved in the drug trade, and what practical measures can be taken to lessen their involvement.’

Femmes de l’Est literally means ‘women from the East’. It is the French name of an organization of Albanian prostitutes in France. The women of Femmes de l’Est are usually lured to France under false pretences and pressure by people traffickers. Justine Ilaria is one of them. She emails us about the problems Albanian sex workers encounter in their daily lives in Western Europe. Abused by pimps, clients and the police, does not make their lives easier. In order to better protect themselves, Justin decided to organize the other women who shared her predicament.

By providing helpful information, Femmes de l’Est tries to protect Albanian sex workers from all kinds of abuse. The organization provides information about migration, housing, health, insurance, social welfare and other important issues. According to Justine, it’s often about concrete issues like money management and supporting a family. ‘We want women to take control and be able to make decisions about their own life.’

A lot of information is communicated verbally. Providing information is also one of Justine tasks: ‘I organize small meetings for sex workers. But because the police intimidate and harass us as soon as they find out we work in groups, most information must be given on a one to one basis.’

Besides verbal communication, Femmes de l’Est also published an Albanian language information handbook. ‘With this book we hope women will gain entry to existing facilities,’ says Justine. The organization would also like to publish a similar book in Albania and Moldavia, with the intention of making migrating safer for Albanian women. Justine is proud of her handbook. ‘To be honest, I truly believe that this is the best information there is for Albanian women in all of Europe. At least much better that what we’ve come across so far.’

In addition to providing information to their ‘own’ women, Femmes de l’Est also informs other groups of sex workers. ‘Racism and hatred for immigrants is a big problem in our work, and that’s why we are constantly in contact with French sex workers too.’

When they were searching the Internet last year for financing, they came across Mama Cash’s website. They wanted money to register as an official NGO (non-governmental organization) and to rent a meeting room. The kebab shop where they had met was too small. They also wanted to be able to pay one of their staff members. Justine: ‘Mama Cash offered to pay for our registration costs and our personnel costs. Because of this support, other organizations now take us more seriously. For example, we have now been invited to develop our program in other French cities. Mama Cash has been very important for us.’
Nancy Jouwe, Culture Fund manager: ‘In 2000, we provided multi-year subsidies for the first time. Organizations that can prove that they play an important role in the women’s movement qualify. An example of such an organization is Foundation Zami, which annually presents a Zami Award to a black, migrant or refugee woman who has succeeded in a certain endeavor. And also the Roze Film dagen, which showcases documentaries and movies made by lesbian filmmakers that are not shown anywhere else. Both of these organizations show great perseverance in bringing about real social change.’

‘In 2000, another wonderful project was the summer school for refugee women, organized by Women Against Expulsion. It was a mixture of education, reflection, and information exchange, cultural activities, meetings and empowerment. There are relatively few educational possibilities for refugee women, and summer schools are often reserved for white university graduates. That makes this project unique.’

‘We also supported the Black Magic Woman Festival, a cultural festival in southeast Amsterdam, offering black migrants and refugee women a stage for various artistic performances. In 2000, for example, they held poetry readings in the subway.’

‘Sometimes the members of our advisory board play the role of ambassador for interest groups. As an advisor, Leila Jaffar visits with women’s groups all over our country. She encourages women’s groups to apply to us, and that works out pretty well, especially for groups who are located far away from Mama Cash.’

‘For the Culture Fund, 2000 was the year of young women, featuring a variety of projects for young women. One of them was the master-class ‘documentary making’. We wanted to offer a couple of girls the chance to become professionals in this relatively expensive profession. The project was undertaken in cooperation with ‘Kunstbende’, (an organisation for young children and art): four short-films were selected from among the competition’s regional finalists. The makers of these followed our master-class and made a new short-film. What’s special about it is that these really young women, sixteen and seventeen years old, ultimately made beautiful documentaries.’

‘At the end of 2000, we organized an exhibition to celebrate the 10-year anniversary of Merna Cash Art Awards. The jury unanimously agreed in their judgment of the work of Jeanne van Heeswijk. She received the Mama Cash Art Award 2000 (ƒ 8,000), for her surprising and self-willful art work about the relationship between art, reality and the audience. Katrin Korfmann won the Marna Cash Incentive Award (ƒ 3,000) for her installations observing human behavior. In addition, both winners received a publication of their own work. Together with the winners, the work of three other artists, Machted van Buren, Hadasah Emmerich and Lidwien van de Ven, were exhibited. The exhibition was held from January 21 until February 18th at the ‘Bagagehal’ of Loods 6, in Amsterdam.’

‘Within the Culture Fund, the visual art side has grown a lot. In 2000 we made the preparations for a donor advised fund partnership with the Tijl Fund and a cooperation with the Josine de Bruyn Kops Foundation. Both support female visual artists. Marna Cash believes that it’s important to provide them with recognition and space, because the amount of attention given to women in art has yet to result in a culture change within the policies of museums and galleries, where men still determine and dominate the collections.’

organised a debate in the Bible, Amsterdam.
At the entrance of the info-cafe The Site, two young women draw attention to themselves, laughing loudly and wearing wigs, glasses and feathers. They dress up for a Polaroid snapshot. A flash and they are unrecognizable and recorded for posterity against a background of old-fashioned wallpaper. Glamour photography? It isn’t a normal day at The SITE.

The SITE is an info-cafe for young people in the heart of Amsterdam. The atmospheric, three-story building is where you can go for information about education, rights, travel, health, accommodation, work, and leisure activities. Or you can simply have a cup of tea or use the Internet. Here, on March 8, 2000, the first program for Female Power took place. ‘Sorry boys, but it’s girls only today!’ The date was expressly chosen. Implicitly, attention was devoted to the feminist tradition on this, International Women’s Day. But at the same time, it must not become a day devoted solely to political discussion. Rather a ‘Do-Day’, during which women were put to work. The day’s theme was ‘Young Women, Careers and Choices’. ‘We wanted to let the young women know that Mama Cash is there expressly for them,’ says Nancy Jouwe, who organized the day for Mama Cash in cooperation with E-Quality (expertise center for gender and ethnicity) and The SITE. ‘There’s definitely a generation gap between older and younger feminists. They often have the same opinions, but they use a completely different language to express themselves. We want to bridge that gap.’

Around 60 women, between the ages of fifteen and thirty, and hailing from many different countries, came to Amsterdam. They were of diverse ethnic and educational backgrounds. In the broad program (‘da mix of your life’), they could, as if using a TV remote control, click through their life choices. Website building, spirituality (‘believe in your own power’), starting their own businesses (‘dreaming of gold’), making choices based on theatre role-playing ... it was all on offer. Dounia Bouzoubaa volunteered to help organize Female Power. She’s extremely enthusiastic: ‘It was a great success! The organization itself was already a success: we worked with a team of young women from The SITE, E-Quality and Mama Cash. That was actually female power in action. The day itself was wonderful. The auditorium was full, although some women there were older than thirty-years-old. All the young women together ... that gave a tremendous feeling of power. What is Female Power? That’s personal. For me, it means that young women can make their own choices and are consciously engaged with who they are. Therefore we expressly didn’t call it ‘girl power’. That was too reminiscent of the Spice Girls: short tight shirts and freedom from obligations. It’s not about reckless experimentation; for us the power of young women is important.’
Every day there’s a bustling coming and going. The Moroccan women’s committee organizes a coffee morning, the women’s library is open, Bayanihan has a client visiting to discuss aid programs, VIDO organize a meeting, or the March 8th Committee meets again. The large square building of the Multicultural Emancipation Center (MEC), in Utrecht, offers space to at least eight women’s groups and organizations. But this daily bustling atmosphere is nothing compared to the buzz during the celebration of International Women’s Day. In 2000, the March 8th celebration exploded into a six-day festival, which was also captured on film.

Charlot Pierik is responsible for this explosion. She works as emancipation support officer at the MEC. Charlot: 'In 2000, we wanted to organize this occasion on a larger scale. I don’t do this alone; I work together with the March 8th Committee, which is comprised of new members each year. Some people take part every year, but I also look for new members. In this, I don’t want to choose the easiest way. I’d rather give all participating organizations a voice, also those people who aren’t used to participating in meetings or organizing.'

MEC used to celebrate March 8th only on the day itself. Compared to previous years, the festival needed a new approach. 'We deliberately chose a motto that could be understood in a broad perspective: character in diversity. We also wanted to involve as many organizations as possible, organizations that were already celebrating March 8th, as well as organizations that had never thought about what International Women’s Day meant to them.'

The intention therefore was for activities to be focused on gender, emancipation and diversity, says Charlot. 'But everything that was of any importance to the participating organizations was scheduled into the program. If one women's group usually bakes cakes on March 8th, who are we to reject such an activity from our festival? In this way we provided the opportunity to discuss what Women’s Day means to all different types of women.'

More days means more diversity and organizations, but also less unity. Charlot: 'We run the risk of dividing the program. It's a trap, but also an opportunity. The group that did it all alone last year wasn’t able to see what others were doing. Now, there’s more interaction and exchange, you learn from each other and get to know each other.' And sometimes this leads to interesting collaborations, such as the one between the Center for Anti-Discrimination (STAD) and the Women’s Vocational School Alida de Jong. 'STAD wanted to organize a debate, but hadn’t yet found a suitable subject. The Alida de Jong School had recently published some research findings and wanted to use it. Both came to the committee. Because we had an overview, we were able to arrange for them to meet. In the end, they jointly organized a debate about the research.'

Finally, every day was different. There were discussions and workshops, but also a fashion show, a dance performance, lectures by animated female writers, goddess visualizations, cabaret, and music. 'It was a wonderful week! Something remarkable was in the air. At the same time, however, we had to work very hard.'

A camera crew navigated its way through all this bustling activity. Charlot: 'We wanted to record the festival on film as a historical record, to show future generations what we did for the March 8th celebration in 2000. This is our intercultural cooperation model, this is how it works. And also to show that the women's movements isn't only white and heterosexual, as was said about it 25 years ago. Of course, I also don’t mean to imply that we’re the black, migrant, refugee, and lesbian women’s movement, but still...’
Tendayi Matimba, Guarantee Fund manager: 'In 2000, we granted fourteen loan guarantees, which was twice as many as in 1999. This increase is partly owing to the current economic conditions: it's now easier to quit a job and to risk starting your own business. Moreover, it's easier for a woman to get a loan from a bank. But we expressly focus on the women who this does not apply to, women whose starting point is being unemployed and on welfare, young women, biack, migrant and refugee women, or women with pioneering entrepreneurial plans.'

'Most women start in retail trade or by providing personal services. By this we mean fitness centers, beauty salons, and child-care centers, but also entrepreneurs involved in pet care, such as running stables and dog grooming services.'

'Among the remaining companies to which we provide loan guarantees, we increasingly see more groundbreaking and innovative initiatives, such as the Boskops Care Hotel, a nursing home where regular hotel guests can also stay. But also Be Dressed, a clothes store and service bureau for individuals, the events agency Lijn 2 and Geylan Sahin Import & Export are good examples. We gladly support entrepreneurs who have respect for people and the environment, and corporations that contribute to a multi-cultural society.'

'In 2000 we cautiously started to provide small loans for amounts of up to f 5,000. Our experience is that banks don't lend such small sums. Some female entrepreneurs are seemingly in need of small loans and miss the boat at other organizations. Although we didn't draw much attention to this, we provided six small loans. To reach entrepreneurs, we also organize workshops, Together with Rosita Bouterse, I organized the workshop 'Dressing of Gold' several times, which was received well. Rosita is an independent marketeer and concept developer and involved in Mama Cash as chairwoman of our advisory board. The workshop focuses on how dreams as a creative mental process are the basis of successful companies. Starting entrepreneurs learn how to put dreams of having a private company into practice.'

'The Guarantee Fund is more often invited to give presentations here and abroad. A very good development that we are very proud of. With a view to the European integration it offers interesting opportunities for collaboration. Furthermore, we're involved in the Women Entrepreneurship and International Cooperation (VOIS) foundation. This network's members are border-crossing entrepreneurs who are active in various sectors and connected, ethnically or otherwise, to one or more foreign countries. With this we want to encourage international business and the collaboration of female entrepreneurs, but also develop the current network activities.'

Guarantee Fund - ‘Slowly it dawns on them that only women work here’ - Geylani Şahin Impex, vegetable wholesalers, Huisken

'We want to stand on our own feet, be our own boss and feel that we’re accomplishing something. For ourselves, but also for others,’ declares Serife Şahin, the youngest of three entrepreneurial sisters. Mereyem (34), Havva (30) and Serife (24) own and operate Geylani, a vegetable, meat and grocery store. And, last year, they started a vegetable wholesale business. The sisters’ drive and diligence runs in the family. Havva: ‘We grew up on a farm in Turkey, with chickens, goats and lots of land. My father worked in Europe as an international truck driver; my mother was home alone with us. We had enough money; they didn’t need to work. But they made their own cheese and butter, stored vegetables in winter. When poor people came to our house, my mother was able to give them food.’ Helping the poor and needy is not only one of the five pillars of Islam, but also a great motivating factor for the sisters to work. Mereyem: ‘If you don’t have enough yourself, how can you then help others?’

They began the store ten years ago. Slowly they learned their trade, from the bottom up. Now they even do business abroad. Havva: ‘In tens years we’ve learned everything step by step.’ Serife: ‘The store is a school. You learn it from the beginning; you begin by cleaning, and by serving customers. If you’ve never cleaned, never served customers, don’t know the store prices, you can also never be a wholesaler.’ Mereyem agrees with her sister: ‘Practical experience is important. You can learn everything from a book, but real life is much different than a book.’

With the store’s profits the sisters hired a storehouse and invested in a large truck, forklift and office furniture. To purchase an auction number at the Greenery, they turned to a bank. With a Mama Cash loan guarantee they got bank credit. Last year they bought at auction. Serife: ‘From six to ten thirty in the morning, the auction prices of the vegetables are announced. Every vegetable has its own time period. For instance, a customer calls requesting two pallets of tomatoes. We ask our auction broker what tomatoes cost. Then we call the customer back with the price. If the customer accepts the price, we call the broker back to say we want to buy the tomatoes. Mereyem: ‘We prefer to buy on order. But business is risky. If you don’t take a chance, then you’ll also never gain anything. And we’re lucky that we also have our store. If we buy too much, we can sell it ourselves.’ But there are also risks in the store. Serife: ‘You might not sell any cauliflower one week, but the following week you must again have cauliflower for sale in your store.’ Mereyem: ‘We have no guarantee of what we’ll earn the following month. It’s trade, and you can’t plan that.’

That three women run their own business often leads to surprised reactions. ‘People often say that we’re our father’s three sons,’ jokes Serife. Havva continues seriously: ‘All the customers of our wholesaler business are men. When they telephone, they’ll often ask for my father or for the boss. I always react as if he has momentarily stepped out. I tell them everything they need to know about the prices, yet they continue to ask for someone above me. Also, when they come here to load vegetables, and certainly when it comes to paying their bills, they’ll continue to look for the man of the company. Slowly it dawns on them that only women work here.’
'It doesn’t matter if you want a tailor-made concept or simply an Easter Bunny costume, you always get the red-carpet treatment. You must try to touch people. Of course I want to sell, but my first priority is providing quality advice, so customers will come back again.' Nicole van Galen (36) is the brain and motor behind Lijn 2, concept and realization. Lijn 2 is an events company that provides companies and individuals with remarkable entertainment and activities for their special events and occasions. This can range from a pantomime actor to a chic booth offering fingernail art, henna tattoos and hair artists, or beautiful body-paint with a company logo.

If you’d like, Nicole will write a concept for a company event or provide a tailor-made presentation for a conference. In this, she invests primarily time in maintaining contact with clients. ‘I phone some clients every month, write down what we discuss, and follow-up on it at a later date. For example, the son of one of my clients has a broken leg and the first thing I do when I phone her is to ask how he’s doing. To bond with clients, the personal approach is of great importance.’ She also invests in her relationships with her employees, the freelance body-painters, make-up artists, cosmeticians, hairdressers and actors who work for her. ‘Sometimes my mother says that I talk too much with these people. But I want to spend time doing this. We have a strong team that provides high quality work. I’m proud of that. On location, your employees are your business cards. How you treat them is what they radiate towards customers.’

Nicole started Lijn 2 with a partner who was responsible for arranging and securing their company’s finances. In 2000, Nicole took over the company. ‘We did well and I had everything in order, so I went, full of confidence, to the bank. They rejected my application for credit.’ According to Nicole, this had nothing to do with her business plan. ‘Because I’m a single parent, the bank doesn’t consider directly me a serious candidate.’ At the time, Nicole was receiving a partial welfare benefit. ‘There are special arrangements, like the BBZ (Special Support for Independents), for starting a business while receiving welfare, but this involves a lot of hassle for the banks.’ The Rabobank advised her to get a loan guarantee. Nicole: ‘I didn’t want a loan guarantee from my family. It’s still risky. If something goes wrong, you bring down the people who also must support you.’

A loan guarantee from Mama Cash was quickly arranged, and armed with that guarantee, Nicole returned to the bank. But her application was again rejected. ‘At that point I really thought I’d better quit. But I also realized that quitting meant that I wouldn’t be worthy of running a business. I’ll probably suffer more difficulties in future, but I must become resistant to that. I got such an urge to fight that I phoned the president of the Rabobank directly. I didn’t want to deal with any of his subordinates.’ He said he would reconsider her application. ‘Two days later everything was arranged.’

Today, Nicole is steadily paying off her bank debt. ‘Business is going well, but it remains exciting. We just held an expensive exhibition and then you see that you’re not yet able to build up a reserve. It’s a matter of patience, of taking deep breaths.’ With the help of a few astute advisors, Lijn 2’s future course has been carefully charted. ‘It’s remains a proven fact that quality will ultimately triumph in the end, and my growing clientele proves that my clients appreciate high quality.’

(voor vrouwen aan de basis)
Mission Mama Cash: For eighteen years, Mama Cash has been successfully supplying money where others shy away. We are an independent financing organisation for women, committed to changing and improving the position of women worldwide. Mama Cash strives for a just world, where there is respect for one another and for the environment, where care is provided for those in need and where it is acceptable to be different from others.

With great courage, solidarity and creativity, women throughout the world are striving to improve their own lives and those of other women. Mama Cash, as part of this movement, finances their projects. The agenda of the international women's movement is, therefore, Mama Cash's agenda. Progress has been made, but there is still a lot to do, for example in the area of equity before the law, control over our own bodies, economic independence, participation in democracy and conflict resolutions, fight against (sexual) violence and access to all levels of education. Although Mama Cash is a relatively small foundation, our feminist vision is broad and globally orientated. By supporting innovative projects and enabling women to start businesses and organisations, Mama Cash helps women achieve their dreams and ideal: Mama Cash is investing in the future of women.
