In memoriam Dorelies Kraakman

Dorelies Kraakman, a co-founder of Mama Cash, died on September 24th, 2002 after a long illness. From the start, Dorelies (born in 1946) was actively involved in Mama Cash's day-to-day business. She was a Board Member of Mama Cash's Culture Fund and helped establish the criteria and policy for grant requests in the Netherlands. In 1998, Dorelies stepped down as a Board Member but she continued to follow Mama Cash closely from the sidelines.

In addition to her work for Mama Cash, Dorelies, a lawyer and historian, was a university professor in the Gay & Lesbian Studies department of the University of Amsterdam's Faculty of Social Sciences. In 1978, she was one of the co-founders of this department. Both nationally and internationally, Dorelies was greatly admired for her progressive academic work. Teaching was her great passion. She received a Ph. D. in 1997 for her study of lesbian tableaux in 18th century French pornography. In 1975, the United Nations Year of the Woman, Dorelies and Sylvia Bodmar set up the first Dutch women's cafe the Heksenketel (the Witches' Cauldron) and the first Dutch women's bookshop the Heksenkelder (the Witches' Cellar). The bookshop still exists today (renamed Savannah Bay) in Utrecht.

Introduction

For Mama Cash, 2002 was the year to look ahead. To support women's rights as effectively as possible, it became necessary to keep an eye on the global context, and on new trends, threats and developments. This is especially true recently, as we witness a backlash to women's equality as conservative forces gain greater influence around the world.

Mama Cash once again went in search of our own unique position and contribution. To that end, we realized we needed to add peace and security as a critical new sphere of activity. More than ever before, however, we are choosing to support women who go about their work in unconventional ways. Mama Cash is, ultimately, a player who is not content to simply follow; she also wants to help shape the future.

Despite a weak economy and falling share prices last year, Mama Cash, in fact, managed to raise more resources and provide more grants to women's groups around the planet. In 2002, we were also able to guarantee income for 2003 and ensuing years to ensure our growth in years to come.

And that's good, because our support is still desperately needed, whether it is for an illegal abortion clinic in Kenya, self-defense training for handicapped women in the Netherlands, a union for domestic workers in Mexico, the first telephone help-line for women in Russia, a photo exhibition about female Afghani refugees in the Netherlands, sexual rights information in India, or the first female-run motorbike repair shop in Burkina Faso.

This annual report offers an overview of the groups Mama Cash supported in 2002, each one a groundbreaking initiative. Allow yourself to be inspired by women who, with great courage and ingenuity, are striving for a just and peaceful world.

Mama Cash in 2002

Mama Cash supports the groundbreaking initiatives of women and their organizations who strive to strengthen women's rights worldwide. By financing women's self-initiated projects in the Netherlands, Europe, the Global South, Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, Mama Cash supports the efforts of women empowering themselves and gaining influence over their own lives and environments. To that end, Mama Cash invests worldwide in the future of women.

Mama Cash is the first international, independent women's funding organization in the world. Five women of vision, active in the women's movement set up the foundation in 1983. From the beginning, Mama Cash's objective was to be a groundbreaking funding organization, to lend a helping hand in setting up avant-garde activities and to support those projects. The seed capital provided by Marjan Sax then was transformed into resources to support small-scale, yet innovative, initiatives by and for women in the Netherlands. Twenty years later, Mama Cash has grown into a professional funding organization with an international reputation and an international network of advisors. In the past two decades, Mama Cash has granted some € 11 million to support more than 4,500 groups around the world.

In 2002, Mama Cash supported 400 women's groups from 68 different countries. Despite a weakened global economy, Mama Cash, remarkably, was able to raise more resources. Revenue rose to € 2,014,478, of which 85% was spent directly on programmes and 15% on fundraising and communications.

Objectives

Mama Cash is one of very few international women's rights funds working at a global level with a critical focus on cutting-edge issues. The strength of Mama Cash stems from the belief that women worldwide know both how to prioritize their struggles and have the best solutions to address them. With great courage, solidarity and creativity, women throughout the world strive to improve their own lives and those of other women. Mama Cash, as part of such movements, supports this work, particularly the most pioneering and groundbreaking women's rights initiatives. The agenda of such movements is, therefore, the agenda of Mama Cash. To this end, we provide seed grants as well as development grants to help establish and strengthen women's rights groups and initiatives. Moreover, Mama Cash supports those activities, which, because of their controversial or innovative approach, have difficulty obtaining funds from other sources.

What makes Mama Cash unique and different from other grant-making organizations is our ability to be on the constant lookout for women who have the vision and the courage to do groundbreaking work in their countries. Furthermore, Mama Cash supports small groups, often newly established and ones that have difficulty finding resources elsewhere because of their small size or original approach. By doing so, we address a specific niche in development funding. We believe that by providing small grants, we are filling a gap and providing a service that other grant-makers do not give because of a lack of time, resources or expertise. Mama Cash also strongly believes that by supporting small-scale initiatives, great goals can be achieved.

Women's Funds

Our core strengths are resource mobilization and strategic grant-making. In the last four years, Mama Cash, together with the Global Fund for Women, has played an active role in the expansion of a network of independent women's funds in Africa, Asia, Latin America and Central and Eastern Europe. This is a very important and innovative program for Mama Cash. By providing institutional support to these women's funds and providing networking and learning opportunities, Mama Cash aims to promote Southern philanthropy as well as Southern decision-making about grant-making. Because of this work, as of 2002, women's funds now exist in Mongolia, the Ukraine, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Ghana, South Africa (2), South India, Nepal, and new funds are being established in Hong Kong, Germany and Central America. Mama Cash has given financial and/or technical assistance to most of these funds. We expect that this movement of women's funds will have a large effect on the way women's rights activities are funded and directed in the future.

Focus

Mama Cash supports women within five priority thematic areas: Bodily Integrity; Art, Culture and the Media; Economic Justice; Peace and Security; and Empowerment and Participation.

Bodily Integrity: Women demanding control over their own bodies.

Bodily integrity refers to the right of all women to be free of physical, sexual and mental violence and persecution that injures women in any way, and or inhibits access to freedom of choice with regards to their bodies. Bodily integrity, therefore, includes full access to sexual and reproductive rights and health, freedom from sexual and physical violence, and access to full citizenship rights for those women who might not adhere to (conservative) male-defined norms of female "moral" behaviour. Under this priority area, we focus on women's groups working to ensure a safe space for women, where women can be ensured a right to life and security as well as choose to live the lives they want, in the way they want to, without being oppressed, injured or controlled.

Art, Culture and Media: Women using art, culture and the media for social change.

Mama Cash holds the view that art, culture and the media can contribute significantly to social change. Mama Cash supports the right of women to express themselves artistically by enabling beginners and/or unknown artists, groups and movements to express their critical ideas and views. We also believe that popular culture – for example, music videos, soap operas, radio programs and websites – are excellent ways to reach out to young people as well as touch people’s hearts and souls. In doing so, Mama Cash focuses on all forms of art, culture and media (visual art, theater, publications and audio-visual art, including film). Mama Cash emphatically focuses on the combination of content and quality of the work. Mama Cash supports the visibility, the voice, the creative imagination and the active role of women in society.

Economic Justice: Women fighting against economic exploitation and poverty, looking for solutions.

Economic justice is an integral part of the broad struggle for women’s rights and a just world. The grants we make under this theme include supporting women’s groups that are working on feminist economic alternatives and models with the aim to influence economic policies nationally, regionally and internationally. Moreover, we support initiatives on international economics, trade and investment and the role of transnational companies. Mama Cash believes that by doing so, new strategies at the global and local level can be found in order to change the power relations that bind women to poverty.

Peace and Security: Women working towards peace and security.

More than 130 of the 180 countries in the world are engaged in war or armed conflicts. Situations of conflict often have grave consequences for the position of women within the family, the community or the country. During conflicts women are often solely responsible for the continuation of family life and the economy. At the same time women are often the targets of sexual violence. War and conflicts generally lead to a flood of refugees and internally displaced persons. The majority of refugees are women. At the same time, women are often excluded from peace negotiations. Initiatives that Mama Cash support include trauma counselling, participation of women in peace negotiations, and the protection of women's rights activists in situations of conflict.

Empowerment and Participation: Women making their voices heard, seeking influence and control.

By focusing on empowerment and participation, Mama Cash supports the visibility, voice and active role of women in private and public life within their communities, countries and regions. This strategy strives to empower women to re-think and re-structure their roles in their families, communities, and societies. Many of the grants we make within this theme focus on leadership training, capacity building, and facilitating women to generate and receive key information and knowledge. Through this priority theme, we strive to help women achieve full legal and political access to education, employment, inheritance and freedom of movement. Groups that challenge traditional norms about male and female roles and behaviours are also eligible for support under this focus area.

Greater Support

Mama Cash believes that it is important to maintain close contact with her supporters. Consequently, special guided tours of the Mama Cash Art Exhibition (Rotterdam) were organized for donors. In September and November, individual donors attended meetings organized at Mama Cash's office for those residing in the Amsterdam region.

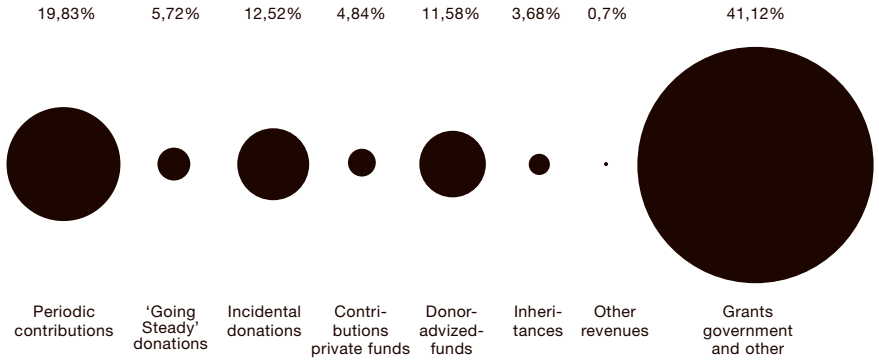

In fact, half of Mama Cash's income is derived from a group of loyal donors. Of particular note is the sharp rise in donations deriving from inheritances: € 85,230 in 2002 (compared to: € 20,654 in 2000, and no inheritance donations in 2001).

For years now, Mama Cash supporters have had a creative option for making larger donations: Mama Cash's 'donor advised funds', which are initiatives by individuals, organizations and companies eager to donate to a project or issue that conforms to Mama Cash's general objectives. When establishing a donor advised fund with Mama Cash, donors are then able to use Mama Cash's infrastructure (administration, money transfers) and professional expertise (including our network of advisors, project reviewers), while at the same time being able to support issues and groups of their own choosing. In 2002 Mama Cash had three donor advised funds. The Tijn Fund provides grants to female artists aged 40 years and older. The Born Fund provides grants to projects that focus on education, policy-making and the political participation of women. Finally, the Op Eigen Benen (On Your Own Two Feet) Fund, established in 2002, finances transformative and pioneering activities of individual women.

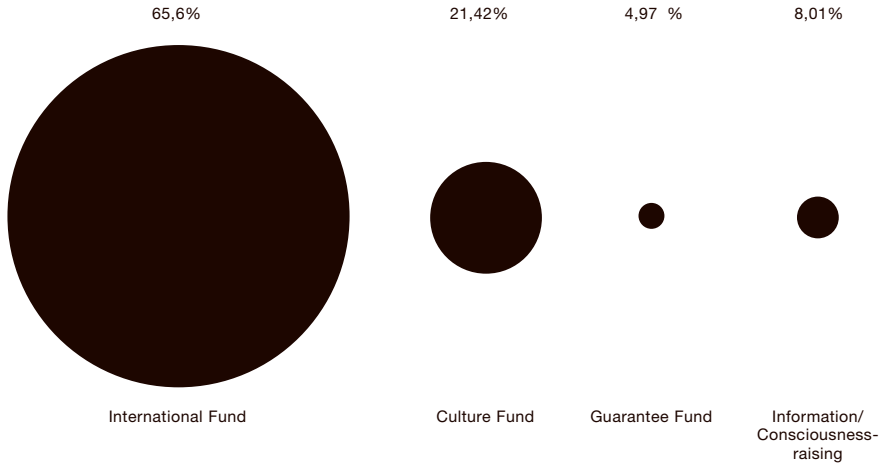

Successful Fundraising Activities

There are many ways that financial resources come through Mama Cash's door. In 2002, The Budget Phone Company began donating a fixed percentage of its customers' telephone bills to Mama Cash. Ellen Sprenger, Mama Cash's Executive Director, took part in a popular Dutch television program "Who is... the Mole?" and in a special fan appreciation auction was able to raise some funds for Mama Cash. Additionally, various fundraising birthdays and anniversary celebrations were held in 2002.

Mama Cash

The balance sheet contained in the annual financial report, the statement of Revenues and Expenditures, and the operational costs in 2002 are derived from the Annual Financial Report 2002, which was drawn up in accordance with the Central Bureau for Fundraising's 'Reporting Guidelines for Fundraising Organizations'. The 2002 Annual Financial Report was audited by the accountancy firm, Berk Accountants and Tax Advisors, with a declaration of approval, dated May 3, 2002. The drafting of the annual report is the responsibility of the Executive Board of Foundation Mama Cash. A complete version of this annual financial report is available.

Mama Cash has at her disposal a free reserve of capital, which serves as security for the continuation of the organization. The policy is focused on ensuring that this capital reserve remains at least twice as large as expenditures. In addition, Mama Cash also has a restricted reserve of capital, on which the allocation is fixed.

Personnel and Organization

2002 was a year of investing in the future. An integral strategy was developed (2003-2005) and work was done on building an internal company structure to serve a modern and versatile Mama Cash. The organization is the engine behind achieving our objectives, setting our objectives, and our activities. Investing in the organization is, then, also a fundamental part of Mama Cash's ambitions. In 2002, changes were made to the personnel structure, resulting in a stronger work force, in particular, the management team. In the short term, operational costs were scrutinized, resulting in a savings of approximately € 250,000, specifically relating to relocation, set-up and personnel costs. For the long-term, investments were made to ensure more efficient operational management and computer systems. Moreover, 2002 marked the start of a process to develop a job description and personnel policy plan.

Organization

Mama Cash is a foundation. The Foundation Mama Cash manages the finances, controls the annual budget, and employs all personnel. In 2002, Mama Cash's activities were consolidated in three funds – the International Fund, the Culture Fund, and Guarantee Fund – and the working group Women with Inherited Wealth. Each fund has an advisory board, and the women who sit on the boards have specific areas of expertise. An advisory board also supports the Women with Inherited Wealth working group.

The International Fund especially makes use of a worldwide network of local advisors. These are professional women who are authorities on the situation in their respective countries and who endorse Mama Cash's various criteria. It is through local advisors that staff members gain information about the groups or organizations that have submitted requests to Mama Cash.

International Fund

Mama Cash supports small, independent women's groups who strive to improve the position of women in the Global South (the Third World), the former communist countries of Central and Eastern Europe, and the former Soviet Union. For this purpose, Mama Cash provides 'start-up money' for setting up new groups and projects. Moreover, Mama Cash supports groups who, because of their radical stance or innovative approach, have difficulty obtaining funds from other sources. Financial support is given to women's groups who are not affiliated with governments, political parties and religious organizations.

As an extension of her support for women's organizations in the Global South and Central and Eastern Europe, Mama Cash, in partnership with the U.S. – based Global Fund for Women, invested in the setting up of a worldwide network of women's funds that operate from a perspective of women's rights.

This network meets once a year to share experiences and devise strategies for combining their strengths. Currently, members include women's funds from South Africa (two), Ghana, India, Nepal, Mexico, Brazil, Mongolia, the Ukraine, Netherlands and United States. In addition, plans are in place for starting women's funds in Chile, Central America, Hong Kong and Germany.

In July 2002, Mama Cash organized a meeting in Uganda of local Mama Cash advisors and representatives of various African women's funds. Under the motto, "Kilole ai wezi kusakula busu, Wote kwa umoja" (Swahili for "You can't climb a tree with one arm"), the subject of this meeting was: Trends in Africa and Challenges for the Future. In Africa, as elsewhere in the world, conservative opposition to women's advancement is ever more threatening. This means that fighting for the basic rights of women is dangerous work.

Successful activists are frequently intimidated and the victims of smear campaigns because they represent strength, leadership and success. Traditional practices such as female circumcision proceed unchecked. Owing to a chronic lack of information about their rights, women are often left to believe that circumcision is necessary to become a fully-fledged woman. At the same time, the African women's movement is extremely militant. Increasing numbers of women are active in political and corporate decision-making processes and in setting up their own projects. Participants in the Mama Cash workshop also stressed the need for having regularly scheduled meetings, which serve as places for reflection and sharing. Mama Cash and women's fund colleagues from Ghana will financially support future meetings.

Culture Fund (The Netherlands)

The Culture Fund strives to show the diversity and strengths of women in The Netherlands. By supporting women's projects, the Culture Fund contributes to the structural improvement of women's social position, the image of women, and the development of a collection of ideas with regard to issues of gender and ethnicity, as well as revealing the artistic expressions, ideas and experiences of women. The number of requests rose by 15% and was equally distributed over the various categories (such as general costs and start-up costs, campaigns, events, art, multimedia, publications). This is a remarkable rise, considering that in 2001 there was no discernable growth. Clearer choices concerning content and definitions resulted in a stricter pre-selection process, in which 44% (259) of requests could immediately be rejected.

Guarantee Fund (The Netherlands)

For 19 years, the Guarantee Fund has extended loan guarantees to female entrepreneurs, helping 140 women's businesses. Over the years, Mama Cash has put up 1.2 million euros in securities for female entrepreneurs and in only 15% of the cases did Mama Cash have to repay the loans. Today, the entrepreneurial climate for women in The Netherlands is much improved: one in three small and medium-sized businesses are run by women, and in terms of possibilities for acquiring financial support, the situation is also much improved. In various ways, banks now show that they welcome female entrepreneurs. Moreover, Mama Cash is no longer alone: other institutions now exist to support female entrepreneurs who still face obstacles, like minority women or women returning to work after having a family. As a consequence of these developments, female entrepreneurs are appealing less often to the Guarantee Fund. The achievement of our goal – to stimulate female entrepreneurship through broadening their access to money – is now in sight. In 2002, therefore, a decision was taken to discontinue the Guarantee Fund for 2003.

Women with Inherited Wealth (The Netherlands)

Women with Inherited Wealth encourages women with inheritances to use their capital in a socially responsible manner, while also helping inheritors manage their money by organizing financial management courses and various theme-specific events. This year's themes were primarily 'the bank' (which is the 'ideal bank' for me?) and new governmental inheritance laws. For the first time in its 17-year history, Women with Inherited Wealth organized a nationwide event in 2002: the American philanthropist Tracy Gary lectured on affecting social change through donations, and the Tides Foundation's Idelisse Malavé, who is an American broker between wealthy individuals and good causes, led a workshop entitled, 'The Transforming Power of Giving'. In addition, Women with Inherited Wealth organized a donor meeting and developed and personalized its donation strategy. This led to practical guidelines for 'donating to good causes' and the setting up of a donor advised fund.

The Young Feminists of NextGENDERation Rutvica Andrijasevic, Sarah Bracke, Cristina Gamberi and Anna Rappazzo are enthusiastic, young feminists. They are part of NextGENDERation, a network of about 150 girls that shares knowledge and organizes advocacy activities on the economy from a feminist point of view.

During a chance, informal meeting, Rutvica, Sarah, Cristina and Anna found one another through discussions about the alternative-globalization movement, which the media often negatively labels as the 'anti-globalization movement'. What it is, in fact, is a collection of organizations that opposes the current economic globalization process because it primarily benefits powerful corporations. NextGENDERation stands for fair trade and social justice, and they see from close range how the women's movement worldwide experiences globalization, in a positive way. The UN's World Women's Conferences or the World Women's March are fine examples of positive transnational cooperation. One might therefore expect women's liberation to be an integral part of the alternative-globalization movement, but NextGENDERation knows better. The alternative-globalization movement puts economic inequality first, while largely ignoring other unequal balances of power, like those between men and women and the imbalances which exist between various ethnic groups.

The young women of NextGENDERation were angered by this willful ignorance but it didn't stop them from openly discussing the subject. On the contrary, within two weeks they had made plans to host a workshop and have it included in the program of the first European Social Forum (November 2002). Their workshop was entitled: 'Missing Links: Feminism and Globalized Resistance'. The European Social Forum (ESF) is the meeting place for groups fighting for a fair globalization process. NextGENDERation, moreover, was able to mobilize the participation of leading women from various European countries in the ESF. Mama Cash contributed funds for 14 travel grants for female participants and the organization of the workshop. During the workshop, participants searched for links between the women's movement, lesbian groups, black, migrant, and refugee organizations, and the alternative-globalization movement. With this approach, Rutvica, Sarah, Cristina and Anna stimulated debate and offered groups the chance to form a network and strike up alliances. In short, cooperation between the various movements is the key ingredient for social change to happen. The workshop also received much media attention: in articles and during the Social Forum in Porto Alegre (January 2003), these young women made their opinionated, feminist voices heard within the alternative-globalization movement.

Mama Cash thought this was an important project to support. NextGENDERation is a small-scale, innovative initiative and exemplary of the third feminist wave. With its workshop and ensuing work NextGENDERation raised critical issues that also connect to current, international developments—criteria that Mama Cash closely considers when evaluating grant requests.

Mission Accomplished When Mama Cash first began issuing loan guarantees in 1983, female entrepreneurship was still in its infancy. Banks and government facilities would not recognize the needs of female entrepreneurs. With her Guarantee Fund, Mama Cash provided the collateral to women's businesses, thereby absorbing the financial risks, so that the doors of the male dominated financial sector could open.

At the time, to start an entrepreneurial venture, one first had to overcome prejudices. For this reason, Mama Cash's most important requirement was that businesses she supported should in some way contribute to changing society's view of women in business, and that a larger group of women other than just the entrepreneur should benefit from the venture. Now, in 2002, that bleak atmosphere of 1983 is gone. One out of three entrepreneurs running small and medium-sized businesses is a woman and banks are bending over backwards to attract the business of female-run start ups. In 2002, the question was raised as to whether the Guarantee Fund was still needed, especially given the high number of female entrepreneurs and the lowering number of requests for loan guarantees. After careful consideration, it was decided to discontinue the Guarantee Fund. Meanwhile, groups of female entrepreneurs who still encounter difficulties, such as ethnic minorities or women returning to work after having a family, can now appeal to other organizations, such as Seon, a guarantee fund for minority women starting businesses (The Hague), and the Statson Multicultural Starters Fund (Rotterdam), which helps women and men starting out from disadvantaged socio-economic positions.

Just the Difference Over the past 19 years, Mama Cash has supported 140 requests and provided loan guarantees totaling 1.2 million euros. In 19 years, less than 15% of all collateral provided had to be written off as so-called 'bad debt'. The average amount of a loan guarantee was 6,221 euro, which is a relatively small amount, but for many entrepreneurs it was just enough to make a difference. Marianne van Leeuwen, a co-founder, with her sister Barbara, of 'Miep Kniep, the cost-cutting company', explains: "Thanks to the Mama Cash loan guarantee we received in 1998, we were able to get the required financing. We thought that since we were university students and had a new and good idea, we'd receive financing but that was not the case. We were rejected by three banks. The bank that eventually financed us was much more interested in our ability to pay back the loan than in our price advice bureau. "

While it is true that over the past five years banks have opened their doors wide to white female entrepreneurs, many doors still remain closed to black, migrant or refugee women, and for women on welfare who are trying to start businesses. When Marcha van Glaanen, a young Surinamese woman armed with a diploma and solid business plan began knocking on bank doors in 1997, she was told to go away. People said, "we've had bad experiences with black people, and definitely with women", and therefore they were not interested in granting her a loan. Thanks to a Mama Cash loan guarantee, though, her long journey from bank to bank ended with her receiving enough credit to get started. Marcha's Fitness Studio in Amsterdam expanded after just a year and a half. A female-owned and operated business still occasionally produces surprised reactions from customers. The three sisters Mereyem, Havva and Serife, who started a wholesale vegetable business in 1999, know all about that. Havva: "All of our customers are men. When they telephone, they'll often ask for my father or for the boss. I tell the customers all they need to know about the prices, yet they'll continue to ask for a man. Also, when they come to our warehouse to load the vegetables, and definitely when it comes to paying the bills, they'll continue to look for the man of the company. Slowly it dawns on them that only women work here. "

New Challenges Through her accumulated expertise and professionalism, Mama Cash has become a valuable partner in the financing of women's small businesses.

With a certain measure of pride we can certainly say that thanks in part to Mama Cash's efforts, the doors of the financial world were thrown open to female entrepreneurs, and that other institutions have since come to realize how important it is to support them. Having achieved these goals, however, the time has now come for us to go in search of new areas to support 'groundbreaking' work.

Breaking Through the Myths surrounding Rape in Jamaica In Jamaica, the number of cases of rape and (domestic) violence against women is very high, one of the highest in the world¹. Rape is one of the five most frequently committed crimes on the island. Surrounded by myths and taboo, rape is still seen as a woman's problem, and one that she should be ashamed of.

The women's organization Karibe was founded in order to change public opinion and make rape an open, personal and allowable subject. Mama Cash supports one of Karibe's special projects – special because Karibe not only focuses on consciousness-raising but also on the victims, who are often forgotten. Karibe's message is 'the reality of rape is horrible, but everyone is responsible for rooting it out completely'. Workshops led by therapists are organized for rape victims. In this way, women are able to build up relationships of solidarity among each other and come up with their own ideas for supporting one another. Some of the women from the workshop are also given the opportunity to (voluntarily) tell their own stories on the radio program called 'Before and after Rape: Women Speak of their Lives'. The focus of program is not rape itself, but on the ways the victims were or were not able to resume their normal lives after being raped. A psychiatrist is present to offer after-care treatment, to educate the program's host DJ about subjects under discussion, and to take part in the program's interactive call-in segment when listeners phone in from all over the country. It is a broadcast that reaches many other women who have suffered similar experiences and who can, through listening to these stories, learn about their rights and how to contact Karibe for help.

The driving force behind this project is Ava-Gail Gardiner. She is a Jamaican lawyer who travels back and forth between her home, the Caribbean, and place of work, Brussels. Over the years Ava-Gail has, through her work, met many victims of domestic and sexual violence, including rape victims. Moreover, 10 years ago she herself was sexually assaulted. When her case was heard in court, she was so upset by the way she was cross-examined that she never continued her case.

These experiences made Ava-Gail decide to set up Karibe and use a popular, direct medium that reached millions – the radio – to create a place for women in the social debate. Karibe is entirely run by volunteers and cooperates with other organizations to further publicize its actions. In the Women's Manifesto Committee, Karibe combines its strengths with those of other organizations to lobby for (sexual) violence's inclusion on the political agenda.

Our advisor in Jamaica, Imani M. Tafari-Ama, from Women's Media Watch, knows Karibe well and advised Mama Cash to support the project. "I can say without hesitation that your financial support is necessary. Not only for Karibe, but especially for those who have suffered from sexual violence. Karibe's initiative contributes to removing the secrecy surrounding this crime. This is a pioneering project!" Mama Cash decided to support Karibe precisely for this reason, and because other financiers were afraid to burn their fingers on this ambitious plan. ¹ >127,8 registered rapes per 100.000 women of 15 years and older. A New Start for Female Prisoners in Nigeria In Africa, mothers are often the pillar of the household and the tradition bearers within the family. Family ties are strong, so strong that whatever concerns one family member influences the entire family. The woman is expected to always behave well according to strict social norms and never commit a crime.

In Nigeria, where 80% of all women live in poverty, especially in rural areas, it is hardly surprising that some women do end up committing crimes. Early marriages, having lots of children, lack of education and poor access to health facilities exacerbate problems. When a woman ends up in jail, it not only has a stigmatizing effect, but family and friends also often abandon her and her children. In extreme cases, the entire community banishes them and the woman and her children end up begging in the streets.

It is often the case that women cannot afford the legal help that might bring them justice and secure their freedom. Consequently, women must serve longer prison sentences than is necessary, and prisoners frequently languish behind bars without anybody taking any action for them. That prisoners have few rights is, unfortunately, hardly surprising. During Nigeria's 30-year military dictatorship, human rights were largely ignored. Although democracy was introduced to Nigeria in 1999, violations of human rights continue unabated. Governmental authorities – also those working in prisons – remain accustomed to resorting to violence.

The Society for the Welfare of Women Prisoners (SWEWP) – located in southeastern Nigeria – defends and promotes the rights of the forgotten group of female (ex-) prisoners, repressed women and young girls. The organization arranges rehabilitation and reintegration training programs for women released from prison, which helps women make a fresh start in society. Moreover, SWEWP offers women psychological help through therapy, and in some cases it gives start up grants to women for setting up companies outside of prison. SWEWP even goes into prisons to provide medicine, sanitary napkins and lessons in hygiene. These are all basic facilities lacking in prisons. SWEWP's own in-house doctors, social workers and human rights activists offer help and support in all areas. SWEWP also has its own lawyers, who provide free legal help. Women with children are given precedence. Every case is carefully examined to see if there is a chance the woman can be released on bail or appeal to a higher court. The organization has good access to higher authorities, which makes it possible to lobby for specific legal cases.

The director of SWEWP, Sylvia Akpala, wrote that a prison is often compared to a stomach: as much will come out, as is put in. But, according to her, what is crucial is to find ways to ensure that less goes in, and more comes out, and to keep women away from crime and out of prison. Key goals remain 'rehabilitation' and 'reintegration'. SWEWP plays a vital role in this, and Mama Cash is a wholehearted supporter.

Film about the Lives of Sex Workers in Calcutta For 300 years, sex workers in Calcutta have been fighting for their rights every day. Filmmaker Shohini Ghosh, of the Media Storm Collective, captured the stories of Calcutta's 'night fairies' on film. 'Tales of the Night Fairies' became a 70-minute long documentary film about the fight for more rights for 60,000 sex workers, spearheaded by the sex workers collective DMSC (Durbar Mahila Samanyay Committee). Mama Cash contributed funds for the post-production and editing of the film.

Sex workers are often seen in a bad light. 'Tales of the Night Fairies' shows everything but that. By telling the stories of five sex workers (four women and one man), the documentary is an honest attempt to challenge the stigma attached to the profession. One sex-worker, Mala (a 30-year-old woman), became a sex-worker when she was nine years old in order to escape poverty. She sees now that things have changed over the years. "In the past, many people were forced to do this work, especially because of poverty. Nowadays, some people who are well-educated choose to become sex workers." The fact remains that sex workers belong to the lowest level of Indian society and they are too often denied basic rights like water and housing. Moreover, over the years they've grown accustomed to attacks, police harassment and violent clients. These are common issues for DMSC.

One of the sex workers in the documentary says, "Before, even if a client raped us, we couldn't complain. The police wouldn't listen anyway. But now, the committee [DMSC] has given us social recognition, a place to go and talk, where we are heard." To draw national attention to their cause, DMSC organized a large protest march in Calcutta for sex workers. The march was met with stiff resistance but still, the DMSC persevered. The march received international media attention and the event was even reported on the national television news in Holland.

Marjan Sax, one of the co-founders of Mama Cash, met Shohini, a filmmaker from the Media Storm Collective – the first feminist movie collective – in Delhi. She was impressed by Shohini's innovative approach of using the medium of film to explore the taboos around sex work. She explains: "It's about an international subject, despite the specific context of the documentary. One of the important things about this film is that it doesn't only draw attention to the rights of sex workers; it also focuses on the trade in women and the many ways in which sex workers enter this profession. The Media Storm Collective is convinced that violence against, and exploitation of, sex workers does not occur because of the type of profession sex work is, but rather because of the stigma, and social, political and economic poverty and powerlessness of sex workers. The filmmakers plead for sex work to be acknowledged as a legitimate profession, and they call for violence and exploitation to be rooted out. This is something we, at Mama Cash, totally agree with.” >‘Tales of the Night Fairies’ was shown in Delhi for the first time in January 2003 and will make the rounds of international film festivals, like the IDFA (International Documentary Film Festival Amsterdam), in 2003.<

Rebecca Gomperts receives the Clara Meijer-Wichmann Medal On 10 December 2002, ‘International Human Rights Day’, Rebecca Gomperts received the Clara Meijer-Wichmann Medal. Gomperts is the founder of Women on Waves, an organization that draws worldwide attention to abortion rights. In 1998, before her boat could set sail to spread the word about abortion rights, Mama Cash financed a feasibility study of Women on Waves. Others have since joined Mama Cash in agreeing that such an initiative was both feasible and desperately needed. Rebecca Gomperts received the Clara Meijer-Wichmann Medal for “her deep, personal connection with women’s right to choose [an abortion] and the original way in which she has made this right, in content and practice, a subject of their daily lives.”

Alanis Morissette Supports Mama Cash Canadian rock superstar Alanis Morissette gave complimentary tickets for her concert in Rotterdam to organizations that she is closely involved with, including Mama Cash. During a private reception after the concert, Alanis expressed her personal support for Mama Cash’s efforts, by saying “Keep up the good work!”

The Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs gives multi-year support The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has fully supported Mama Cash’s request for Thematic Co-Financing, a multi-year grant geared to civil society tackling poverty in developing countries. Mama Cash believes that fighting poverty is only possible if the positive contributions women make to the economy are recognized and the unequal balance of power between men and women is rectified. For this reason, Mama

Cash will use this grant – worth 500,000 euro per year (from 2003-2005) – to support new women's groups and independent women's funds in the Global South.

Quality Assurance Mama Cash has once again met the requirements needed for a CBF Hallmark. This hallmark was established by the Dutch Central Bureau of Fundraising (CBF) and is granted to fundraising organizations that responsibly raise money 'for a good cause'. To qualify for the CBF Hallmark, Mama Cash must meet a number of requirements, which are re-evaluated annually. Requirements include:

- At least 75% of the funds raised must be spent on the organization's objectives;
- All fundraising organizations that have a CBF Hallmark must compile their annual reports according to the same guidelines, thus guaranteeing readers transparency and the ability to make fair comparisons.

Facing the Future AWID (Association for Women's Rights in Development) and Mama Cash joined together to launch 'Facing the Future', in order to determine the most critical issues facing the women's movement globally in the next ten to twenty years. Feminist leaders from around the world were commissioned to write their perspectives on what new challenges face women's rights work, and how best for women's groups to tackle these challenges. From their insights it is clear that as a consequence of increasing militarization, religious extremism, the HIV/AIDS epidemic, and the polarization between rich and poor, there is now – after decades of major achievements regarding women's rights – a global backlash against women. Thus, for the women's movement, the need for cooperation and quick and effective action is greater than ever. The authors make concrete proposals for ways to achieve this. The articles and presentations have meanwhile provided input for Mama Cash's new strategic policy (2003-2005) and for various meetings: the regional meeting of Mama Cash advisors and supported organizations in Uganda (July 2002); the meeting every third year of AWID in Mexico (October 2002); the 'Encuentro Feminista de America Latina y el Caribe' in Costa Rica (December 2002); and the World Social Forum in Porto Alegre (February 2003). These collected articles will appear in book form at the end of 2003 (see also www.awid.org).
